May it please your Excellency,

I deem it a proud privilege as Superintendent of the Maharani's Women College to accord to your Excellency a very hearty and respectful welcome on behalf of the College and the High school which are highly honoured by your Excellency's gracious condescension. We have been eagerly looking forward to this memorable event for the unique opportunity it will afford us to express however inadequately our feelings of pleasure and gratitude for your Excellency's solicitude for the welfare of the women of India. We take your Excellency's presence in our midst here to-day as one of the many instances of the keen interest and deep sympathy which your Excellency has evinced in the cause of the advancement of Indian Women.

It is a matter for congratulation that long and happy association with our more fortunate sisters of the West, should have awakened in us a wholesome spirit of emulation and an eager desire for acquiring western knowledge which when harmoniously blended with whatever is best in Oriental culture will surely help to raise Indian Women to any foremost ranks now occupied by other progressive nations of the world.

It is highly gratifying to us that determined attempts are being made all over the land by influential and responsible people to better the condition of women in India. Successive Viceroys and their consorts, some of whose portraits adorn this hall as mementoes of their honoured visits, have whole-heartedly extended their helping hand to Indian women in their earnest endeavour to realise their aspirations. In this connection, I may be permitted to mention your Excellency's noble work in organising an Association for training "Health and maternity supervisors" which will in the near futu supply one of the crying needs of India at the present moment.

We, the women of Mysore, are peculiarly fortunate in having this model institution -- The Maharani's Women's College for th education of our daughters. The College has any a long tradition behind it. Started as a caste girls' school by our late Maharaja of blessed memory, nurtured with care by his noble consort and by his successor our present beloved Maharaja, and uniformly encouraged and patronised by eminent personages both within and outside the State, the College has at last reached the highest stage of development as a constituent part of the Mysore University of which we are all so proud.

In this hall are assembled not only the staff and students of the College Department but also the pupils and teachers of the High School and the inmates of the Women's Home (also Widows' Home) -- an annexe of the High School -- all of which were under a single management until very recently when the College was taken over by the University.

We hope that Your Excellency's gracious visit to this time-honoured and pioneer institution in South India, will inaugurate a long period of greater prosperity yet to come. A word of encouragement and appreciation from your Excellency on this auspicious occasion will be treasured up in our hearts and its memory will act as an incentive for more strenuous efforts in the field of women's Education.

In conclusion, I beg to tender our heartfelt thanks to your Excellency for honouring us to-day and pray that the Almighty may grant your Excellency longlife and prosperity in every undertaking.

It is a matter for congratulation that long and happy association with our more fortunate sisters of the West, should have awakened in us a wholesome spirit of emulation and an eagar desire for acquiring western knowledge which when harmoniously blended with whatever is best in Oriental culture will surely help to raise Indian Women to the foremost ranks now occupied by other progressive nations of the world.

It is highly gratifying to us that determined attempts are being made all over the land by influential and responsible people to better the condition of women in India. Successive Viceroys and their consorts, some of whose portraits adorn this hall as mementoes of their honoured visits have wholeheartedly extended their helping hand to Indian Women in their earnest endeavour to realise their aspiration. In this connection, I may be permitted to mention Your Excellency's noble work in organising an Association for training "Health and Maternity Supervisors," which will in the near future supply one of the crying needs of India at the present moment.

The women of Mysore, are peculiarly fortunate in having this model institution, the Maharani's Women's College for the education of our daughters. The College has a long tradition behind it. Started as a caste girls' school by our late Maharaja of blessed memory, nurtured with care by his noble consort and by his successor our present beloved Maharaja and uniformly encouraged and patronised by eminent personages both within and outside the State, the College has at last reached the highest stage of development as a constituent part of the Mysore University of which we are all so proud.

In this hall are assembled not only the staff and students of the College Department but also the pupils and teachers of the High School and the inmates of its annexe the Women's or Widows' Home which owes its establishment to the noble efforts of Rai Bahadur Mr. A. Narasimha Iyengar, all of which were under a single Superintendent, until very recently, when the College was taken over by the University.

We hope that Your Excellency's gracious visit to this time-honoured and pioneer institution in South India, will inaugurate a long period of greater prosperity yet to come. Any words of advice and encouragement that may fall from Your Excellency on this auspicious occasion will be treasured up in our hearts and their recollection will act as incentive for more strenuous effort in the field of Women's Education.

In conclusion, I beg to tender our heartfelt thanks to Your Excellency for honouring us to-day, and pray that the Almighty may grant Your Excellency long life and prosperity in every undertaking.

Address.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

I deem it a proud privilege as Superintendent of the Maharani's Women's College to accord to Your Excellency a very hearty and respectful welcome on behalf of the College and the High School which are highly honoured by Your Excellency's gracious condescension. We have been eagerly looking forward to this memorable event for the unique opportunity it will afford us to express however inadequately our feelings of pleasure and gratitude for Your Excellency's solicitude for the welfare of the women of India. We take Your Excellency's presence in our midst here to-day as one of the many instances of the keen interest and deep sympathy which Your Excellency has evinced in the cause of the advancement of Indian women.

It is a matter for congratulation that long and happy association with our more fortunate sisters of the West, should have awakened in us a wholesome spirit of emulation, and an eager desire for acquiring western knowledge which, when harmoniously blended with whatever is best in Oriental culture, will surely help to raise Indian women to the foremost ranks now occupied by other progressive nations of the world.

1. Lo ! the Moon is rising in the charmingly clear sky ! Her glorious orb looks as though it is made of purest Camphor. Her beams seem to compete with the straight, slender, well-burnished silver wire, for superiority. Being immersed in the transparent silver glory, the whole world appears to be delightfully imprisoned in a cage of the finest gossamer threads of the lotus.

2. How grand the glory of the rising Moon ! It has changed every mound into a Kailasa (the Silver Mountain of the God Iswara), every tree into a charmingly white royal umbrella, every bog into a pool of pure curds, every expanse of water into a Sea of Milk, every creeper into a lovely wreath of pearls, every Bilva fruit into a pure white conch and, in short, the whole land into the fabled Silvery Isle.

A Scene from the Drama of Savitri.

The story of Savitri is taken from Mahabharata, the great Indian Epic. Savitri is justly held up as the highest ideal of Indian womanhood, for her great devotion, presence of mind and womanly wisdom by which she rescues her husband from the jaws of Death.

Savitri and Satyavan have been married just a year when the former recollects with fear Sage Narada's prophecy in regard to her husband's shortness of life. She is unwilling to leave him alone even for a moment lest his life should be snatched away unperceived. The scene opens with the young couple in converse, Satyavan expressing his desire to go alone into the forest in quest of sacrificial fuel and Savitri entreating him to take her with him. He yields to her prayer on condition that she obtains his parents' consent which she loses no time in getting. Then they both set out. Satyavan is suddenly overcome with headache and exhaustion and lies down. Savitri, alone in the midst of the forest, with her husband dying on her lap, prays for divine assistance. Yama the God of Death, appears to her and explaining his errand carries off Satyavan's life. Leaving behind the dead body of her husband, Savitri follows Yama in spite of the latter's remonstrances. In order to be rid of her Yama confers on her boon after boon, her husband's life alone being excepted. In her desparation Savitri asks to be blessed with one hundred children. Yama in his great hurry to be gone, grants her the request. Now is the long-waited-for opportunity for Savitri. She eloquently pleads for her husband's life as the only indispensable condition for her motherhood. Thus outwitted Yama restores. Satyavan back to life and blesses the couples with long life and prosperity. They return to their anxious parents, when a full account of what has happened comes from the lips of Savitri and joy prevails. They all sing the praises of the All-merciful.

Coriolanus. Act. V. Scene. 3.

Coriolanus, a Roman, who has turned against Rome leading the armies of the Volsces, is now before the walls of Rome and preparing to attack the next day. The scene opens with Coriolanus and Aufidius, the Volscian general, in converse. Menenius, the greatest of the friends of Coriolanus,, had been sent to him as a last resort, to move him from his determination of leading the Volscian attack against Rome. But Coriolanus is adamant and declares that he will no more yield either to public or private embassies. Following this speech Virgilia his wife, and Volumnia his mother, leading his young son Marcius by the hand, enter. In their extremity they the noble ladies of Rome, have come to beg him to change his mind. Crushing his heart's impulse, he struggles for composure and strives to keep to his determination. But Volumnia reminding him that their sad plight is due to sorrow for his exile, pleads most eloquently with him for her country's freedom and begs not to make war but to conclude an honourable peace, advantageous to both parties.

Distressed beyond all measure and struggling for mastery, Coriolanus is unable to speak. His mother pleads harder than ever for a reply and mistaking her son's silence for obstinacy, turns away, but as a last resource, once more throws herself on her knees along with his wife and son. This proves too much for Coriolanus, and he yields, though he knows it will be dangerous to him. He turns to Aufidius and declares that, hereafter, as it is impossible for him to attack Rome, he will make suitable peace, and then asks very wistfully what Aufidius himself would have done, if placed in his position, to which the general replied that he too had been much moved. The scene closes with victory for the ladies—a victory which Coriolanus affirms that nothing in Italy, nor all her swords or her arms could have been able to achieve.

2. O the best of Women! Naturally we have to approach you to earn your regard and favour. On the other hand, to-day you are pleased to be in our midst. Hence this gives us the same degree of delight as the Rohana Mountain, (fabled region of mines of gems of every kind) would give by its approach to a man who was eagerly seeking to hasten towards it in quest of gems. Is this not indeed the height of our good fortune?

3. Our hearts swell with delight at your Excellency's arrival as the bosom of the Ocean at sight of the full-moon. The tender creeper of Women's Education in the country has been well nursed by Your Excellency's sympathy and encouragement.

4. O renowned Lady! May the Lord of the universe always shower His choicest blessings both upon Your Excellency and Sri Krishnaraj Wodiyar, the beloved ruler of our State.
